Tea Table Talks

By May De Witt Talmage

THE CALL OF THE CLOTHES. Was there ever a woman, who, as the spring and summer approached, did not feel "the call of the clothes," be she ever so broad minded, independent or scornful at other times "as to where-with-all she shall be clothed?"

Perhaps it is on an out of season warm day, when she is still bound up to her neck in furs and winter clothes, that the call comes and awakens her to the fact that summer is coming; that her last summer's clothes are demode, and that last year's furs are beyond repair.

Perhaps it is the sight of another woman in a stunning new spring suit, a trim looking hat, and a satisfied air conveying the fact that she has had the forethought and time to be ready, that makes "the call of the clothes" strike one with almost shocking force. And the worst of it all is that the call usually comes when one's pocketbook is depleted by the winter calls for music, school, or grip bills.

Talk about the fall being the "melancholy time of year," spring emphasizes so many things to a woman. It's the time when the soul cries out for all the lovely frivolous gowns and hats one sees in the shops or at the dressmakers, the light hats with tuille and roses, so alluring in the hand or in the shop window, and so disillusioning if you have passed the debutant age, and you try them on seated in front of a triple mirror that reflects front view, side view, and a hand mirror that lets nothing escape as to back view, hair, wrinkles and crow's feet. Never until seated in the full glare of those mirrors do you realize to the fullest extent that time flies. It's a sort of annual reminder.

It takes all one's common sense, and nerve to resist the saleswoman, who, seeing the allure in your eye for some hat that you know is not appropriate for you, says, "Oh, it suits you exactly, just as if it had been made for you." You know she is fibbing, the glass verifies the fact, but you do so wish you could believe her.

Then the gowns! In this day when there is no age limit, and they sell the same model to debutant and grandmother, how hard it is to resist the call of the blood for the beautiful, rather than what suits your style or age. If in this day of massage and exercise, women who have succeeded in keeping their figures slim could just present their backs rather than their faces to the world, we would be spared many shocks.

A college boy laughingly told me how he and "another fellow" were walking behind what they supposed a "peach of a girl" on the street, the other day. "But gee whiz," he said, "if wish you could have seen her old face, when we caught up to her."

Well, it's not always easy to resist the "call of the clothes."

RECEIVER IS NAMED FOR REALTY COMPANY

Federal Judge Hand Names Two Men to Take Over Concern at Stockholders' Suit.

The holdings of the company are said to be about $22,000,000. The company has been in business in New York for 27 years, and until last summer had paid dividends of five per cent. Its difficulties began last year when the building and loan commissioner of Connecticut refused to renew its license in that state.

The receivers appointed today were placed under a joint bond of $100,000. Robert T. Wood, attorney for the company, consented to the appointment of receivers.

The company is capitalized at $2,000,000 under a Rhode Island charter. Its financing was done mostly through the issuance of six per cent bonds. Of these there are about $14,000,000 outstanding, while on Jan. 1 of last year it had a book surplus of $1,610,355. No statement of the company's liabilities was made today, but its assets are estimated at $22,698,000.
